question, he received many answers from the participants. He described the question with proper explanation such as, other than NGO'S all the other organizations are commercial organization and business is an integral part of economy, so if anyone choose to be a sales person there are six important points to be taken care of. First aspect is money- the sales person brings money to the company through his sales. Second, route into management- always CEO will be the centre of all sales, so if a sales man performs well it can be a route to the CEO post. Third, personal control- sales person knows what is to do for a particular market. Fourth, relative job security- as long as the sales person performing, his job will be safe. Fifth, finger on the pulse- he should know the need of the market and should bring feedback to the management. Finally, fun- according to the resource person, if we like to be in sales profession then it is fun to be a sales person.

The session also explained broadly about the downsides of being in sales profession. It demands a lot of hard work to be successful in sales career. Other than that, a sales person should be accountable for the product which he sales. Furthermore, this profession may make people disappointed at times .Apart from these, a sales person should always be on call as per the needs of the customers.

‘How to prepare for a sales career’ was the subtopic covered next. To start a career in sales a person needs to talk with people because it helps to know the needs. Moreover, reading many books to know the recent trends and changes in the market also aids a person to start a bright career in sales area. Doing some sales work provides experience to a person who wants to be in this career.

The first session was concluded by giving brief talk on sales vs. marketing. From his talk, it was clear that a sale is a small but important part of marketing. Marketing describes the entire process
